2. CIA plays an active role in supporting the US export control program. The Agency is represented on the Economic Defense Advisory Committee (EDAC), an interagency group that advises the Secretary of State who also is the administrator of the Battle Act. It is also represented on the Advisory Committee on Export Policy (ACEP), another interagency group that advises the Secretary of Commerce on matters dealing with the Export Control Act. In addition, analysts in CIA scrutinize incoming intelligence from a wide variety of sources, including the most sensitive, for information on illicit trade in embargoed goods or the engagement of Western shipping in this trade. Whenever information that is relevant to the export control program is discovered, it is made available as quickly and as completely as possible, with necessary source protection, to the appropriate enforcement agency of the US Government.
